WITOLD PACHOLIK

Hello! I'm Witold Pacholik, a Computer Science student with a growing passion for backend development. I'm particularly interested in designing robust system architectures, working with APIs, databases, and building scalable server-side applications. I'm focused, analytical, and excited to grow as a backend developer in a business-oriented environment — transforming real-world needs into reliable IT solutions.

COURSES & WORKSHOPS

Corporate Readiness Certificate (CRC) Java in Practice: Building and Managing Applications — conducted by ING

During the course, I learned how to work with key technologies used in modern Java development. The curriculum covered Git for version control, design patterns, relational databases, and creating frontend applications with Angular. I studied how to use Spring Boot, Spring Security, and Hibernate for building backend systems. I also explored best practices in unit testing, dependency management with Maven, and writing basic CI/CD pipelines and UNIX shell scripts.
